UNIVERSITY MORNINGS PLANNED AT LOWELL

LOWELL, MASS. - Poetry, foreign travel, solo guitar, and a woodwind quintet are among topics and performances for "University Mornings" scheduled this spring at the University of Lowell.

Begun last year by the University of Lowell Foundation, Inc., the Wednesday morning series provides a community introduction to cultural activities and educational resources at the campus.

First on the schedule, March 7, is a poetry reading by William Aiken, Robert DeYoung, and James Martin of the campus English department, with Paul F. Marion, a local writer.

William Aiken has published widely in literary magazines and has written critical essays on important American poets such as Gary Snyder and Robert Bly.

Robert DeYoung has had poems in Southern Humanities Review, the New York Quarterly, and in the publication 10 x 3.

James Martin's second book, Ceaseless Talk, Which Never Stops, Of Auschwitz From Our Bliss has just been published by Copper Beech Press at Brown University.

Poems, the third book from Paul F. Marion, contains selections from his previous volumes. His work has recently appeared in magazines in Wisconsin, Virginia, and New York.

The schedule continues on March 14 with the Faculty Woodwind Quintet from the campus, performing under the direction of Donald Bravo. These faculty members from the College of Music play with professional groups including the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A solo singing performance by tenor Ivan Oak is planned for April 4. Ivan Oak, a member of the music faculty, directs the College Opera Workshop group.

Stuart Mandell discusses the impressions of foreign visitors to this country in a talk April 25. A member of the College of Management Science, he has traveled extensively.

On May 2 the final program in the series presents guitarist Robert Squires, a University student who has won many national guitar competitions.

The "Mornings" are held at 10:30 AM in the Recital Hall of Durgin Performing Arts Center, located at Pawtucket and Wilder Streets, Lowell. Refreshments are served at 10:00 AM, and admission is $3.00, or $2.00 for groups of ten or more. For more information contact the University of Lowell Foundation, Inc. at 459-0350.
